Brim Vase

Press release — Autumn 2022

What began as a project of exploration for Norwegian designer Ann Kristin Einarsen has now redefined what a vase could and should look like.

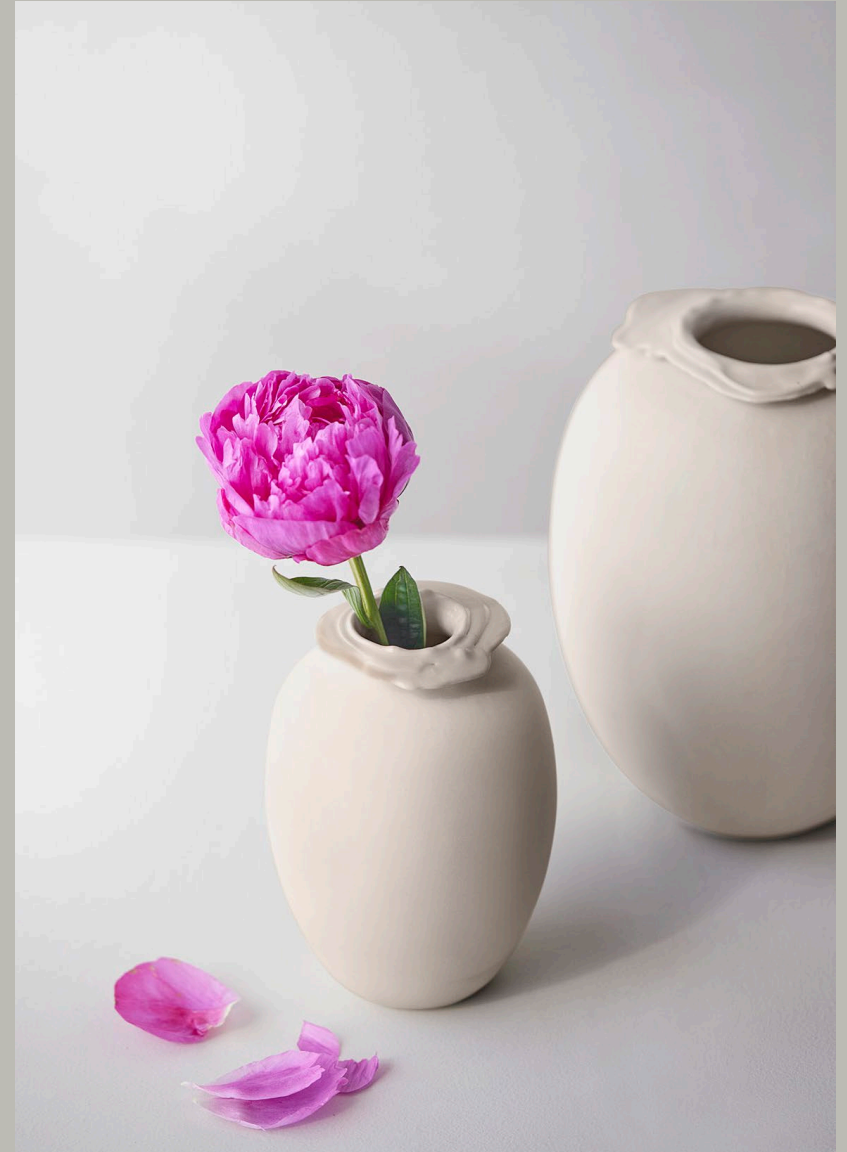

Throughout 2019 Ann Kristin tasked herself with making, glazing, and firing a new ceramic vase every day, sharing the results via her Instagram page. Months and weeks were divided into different themes as she worked systematically through several forms, methods, and finishes.

From this final collection of #365vases, Northern exclusively shares the soft, light coloured earthenware clay and organic shaped Brim Vase.

Available in two sizes, Brim is made by skilled craftspeople in Italy. While any abnormalities are usually cut away after the casting and drying process, here they are celebrated, with the inside and brim of the vase glazed, highlighting each one's individual beauty and unique personality.

“Typically when making ceramics we want to remove all traces of the manufacturing process, but with the Brim Vase I wanted to celebrate these interactions and tell the unique story of each vase's past in someone's hands.”

As a child growing up in northern Norway, Ann Kristin considered the awe-inspiring nature surrounding her native Narvik to be her playground. Today, she continues to 'play' in nature, transforming her childhood fascination with natural materials into cutting-edge, contemporary designs.

With a background in woodworking and a post-graduate degree in ceramics, Ann Kristin is a master of handcrafted forms. She currently explores new potentials for classic materials, such as stoneware, to create sculptures, installations and multifunctional products.

A designer who truly appreciates the beauty of the natural world, Ann Kristin's planters bring nature indoors for others to enjoy.
